

UP TO
$325.50
IN COUPON
SAVINGS INSIDE

SHARE
YOUR VIDEOS
AT MYCENTRALJERSEY.COM

RUTGERS CLOSES IN ON DEAL TO MAKE
EDDIE JORDAN MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

SPORTS, C1

APRIL 14, 2013

A GANNETT COMPANY

$2.00

Sports hero's role shocks community

Did 'squeaky clean' Eric Murdock violate RU locker-room code of silence?

By Sergio Bichao :: @sbichao and Jerry Carrino :: @NJHoopsHaven

Eric Murdock is certain he'll never work another coaching job again. Not in this town or any town. Murdock, 44, is the local sports hero, a product of old Bridgewater-Raritan High School West. He became a storied basketball player for Providence College, where the 6-foot-1 point guard became known as the "Man of Steal," and went onto the National Basketball Association, retiring in 2000 after earning $2 million a year playing for the Los

LOOKING BACK
Scan the QR code or visit MyCentralJersey.com for a photo gallery on Murdock.

Angeles Clippers. Two weeks ago Murdock dropped the match on the powder keg that is Rutgers University, where he worked for the men's basketball team for two years before he

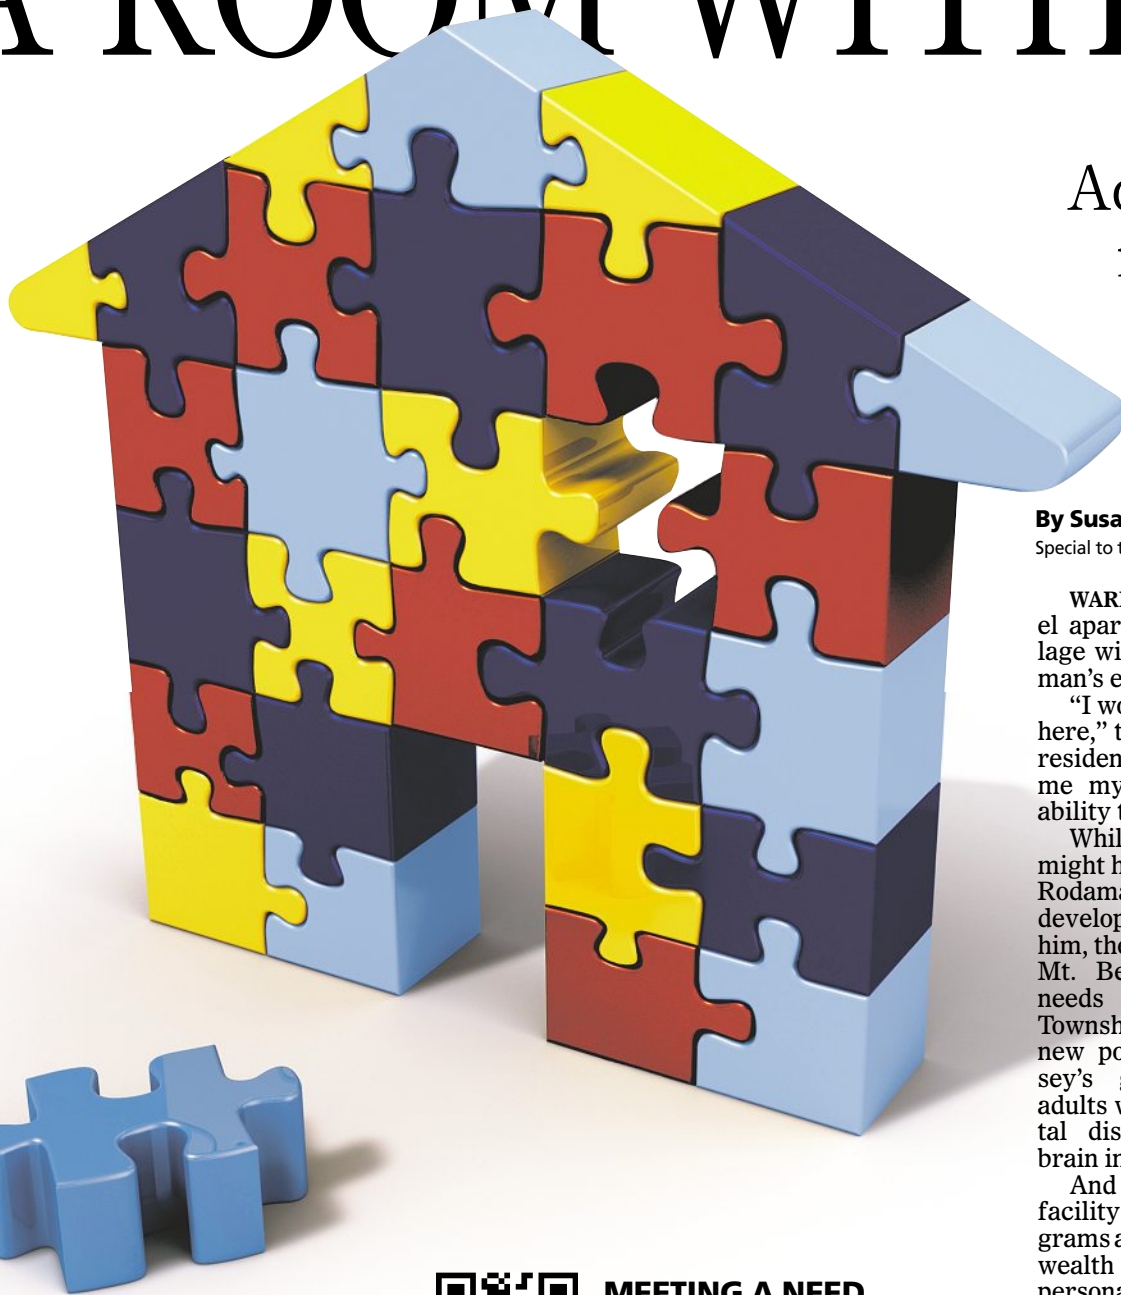

See MURDOCK, Page A4

Bridgewater native Eric Murdock autographs basketballs while answering a reporters' questions at Nets Media Day in 1999. He was let go last summer as a Rutgers basketball assistant. COURIER NEWS FILE PHOTO

A CARING COMMUNITY

A ROOM WITH A VIEW

Adults with special needs find more opportunities, freedom living in Warren at newly opened Mt. Bethel Village

By Susan Bloom
Special to the Courier News

WARREN—Peering into a model apartment at Mt. Bethel Village with his father, Matt Rodaman's eyes light up.

"I would really like to move in here," the 36-year-old Rockaway resident nodded. "It would give me my independence and the ability to do stuff on my own."

While at one time that ability might have been out of reach for Rodaman and other adults with developmental disabilities like him, the recent grand opening of Mt. Bethel Village, a special needs community in Warren Township, has created exciting new possibilities for New Jersey's growing population of adults with autism, developmental disabilities and traumatic brain injuries.

And as its client list grows, the facility's residential and day programs are offering participants a wealth of new opportunities for personal and professional growth, socialization, team-building, and the strength and confidence that come with being part of a thriving community.

Matt Rodaman and his father Jay, both of Rockaway, explore a model apartment at Mt. Bethel Village in Warren. Matt Rodaman wants to move to the complex, a new facility offering residential and day programs to support adults with developmental disabilities. KATHY JOHNSON/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

See BETHEL, Page A5

MEETING A NEED
Scan the QR code or visit MyCentralJersey.com to see video on Mt. Bethel Village.

A CARING COMMUNITY

They have R.I.S.E.N. to fight violence in city

By Cheryl Makin @CherylMakin

NEW BRUNSWICK—Don't tell Brian Gardner that life is too hard. He'll simply tell you that nothing is out of your reach and to rise up to the challenge. After all, that's what he did.

In March 2006, Gardner, at the age of 19, became a single parent—but not in a traditional manner. On the night of his graduation from Elijah's Promise Culinary School, Gardner's father, Brian David, a single father himself, suffered a fatal allergic reaction and died in Gardner's car at age 39. With an ill mother unable to care for his remaining siblings, Gardner became the legal guardian of four, all of whom were teenagers at the time. Gardner did not obtain legal custody of the remaining two, who were very young and had a different mother.

"My father was a single father of seven," Gardner said. "And like him, I did the best I could on my own."

Not long after he welcomed fatherhood, Gardner contracted bacterial meningitis and nearly died. It left him completely deaf in one ear and with 30 percent hearing in the other.

"Things happen. I've been at the bottom," he said. "The only way to go is up."

Working at the New Brunswick Free Public Library since he was 18 and for the city of New Brunswick since he was 15, Gardner is dedicated to his hometown. He understands the difficulty of living in an urban environment and the choices, right or wrong, that can be made. The violence can be pervasive, he said.

Today, the 27-year-old has raised the four siblings to adulthood. The youngest, Angelo, is a student at Texas Technical on a full track scholarship and his sister, Princess, is a new mother. The other two brothers are incarcerated, Gardner said.

"I have to show an example.

See R.I.S.E.N., Page A3

WATCHDOG

Hundreds fatten income with multiple public jobs

Number of double dippers in New Jersey declining

By Jean Mikle
@jeanmikle

The ranks of New Jersey's double dippers — government employees who hold more than one job — continued to decline in 2012, falling by 16 percent.

But those workers received substantial raises last year, with their average salaries rising 4 percent, a New Jersey Press Media review of government pension and payroll data found.

The top earner was Edward L. Kerwin, tax assessor for nine towns in Somerset, Warren, Morris and Hunterdon counties. Kerwin was paid $362,186 last year, an increase of about 1 percent over his 2011 pay.

Messages left for Kerwin at his tax assessor offices in Watchung and Bedminster and his home were not returned.

In Middlesex County, Patrick Deblasio, Carteret's chief financial officer for the past 20 years, holds five different finance-related positions and made $244,606. Messages left for Deblasio at several locations were not returned.

Woodbridge Municipal Court Judge Spencer Robbins also serves as judge in Sayreville and South Plainfield. Woodbridge Municipal Court Judge Emery Toth also serves in Perth Amboy.

"We do not have any concerns about Judge Robbins sitting in other towns," said James P. Nolan, Woodbridge law director.

See DOUBLE, Page A2

INDEX

ADVICE ..... B13
LOTTERIES ..... A2
MOVIES ..... B2

OBITUARIES ..... A10
OPINION ..... E3
SPORTS ..... C1
SUNDAY BEST ..... B1
TV ..... B9

BETHEL

Continued from Page A1

While issues surrounding future funding of facilities like Mt. Bethel Village are under discussion at the state level, their value is undisputed, officials said.

"Mt. Bethel Village is a wonderful model which affords greater opportunities for adults with developmental disabilities to live independently," Tom Kean Jr, state Senate Republican leader, said. The legislator, who toured Mt. Bethel Village in March and has worked to reduce the number of large institutions in the state — "only Texas has more people with developmental disabilities in large institutions than New Jersey" — said he supports "small to mid-range experiences that enable people with special needs to get closer to their communities."

He also backs proposed legislation like the Innovative Services for Persons with Developmental Disabilities Act, a measure which urges new approaches to housing adults with special needs in light of the state's supply shortage.

"We'll always have large institutions, but there needs to be a spectrum of care from large to small, and this is the important niche that Mt. Bethel Village seeks to fill," Kean said. "Its size and the flexibility of its day and residential components are its hallmark."

A concept is born

Though Mt. Bethel Village opened its doors this past January, the bright and well-appointed facility was conceived in 2001.

"The concept was born when Chelsea Corp. opened its doors to having special-needs adults volunteer in several of its assisted-living communities," said Carolann Garafola, executive director of Mt. Bethel Village and former five-time mayor of Warren Township. "Some of the executives and physicians behind Chelsea Senior Living were parents of special-needs children themselves and agreed that there was a need for housing that created a community for adults on the autism spectrum."

Working with the Township Committee, of which Garafola has been a long-time member, the team envisioned a community where low-moderate to high-functioning adults with developmental disabilities could live semi-independently, and construction of Mt. Bethel Village was approved six years ago.

"Adults with special needs know they're different, but they want to be like everyone else, with their own apartment and friends," Garafola said. "Mt. Bethel Village gives them that opportunity but with the support of adult supervision 24-7 if necessary."

According to Garafola, the meteoric rise in the incidence of developmental disabilities like autism over the past one to two decades (see sidebar) combined with the passage of time has led to what has been described as a "tsunami" of disabled adults exiting school systems nationwide and in need of housing.

"Recent reports show that there are over 220,000 adults with autism seeking housing across the country, 8,000 of them right here in New Jersey," Garafola said. "Their parents are aging or passing away too, which has left remaining family members — many of whom don't have a full grasp of or the ability to take on the tremendous responsibilities associated with caring for a family member with special needs — wondering what to do."

For this reason, she said, facilities like Mt. Bethel Village are critical.

"Among our families' primary concerns are that their loved ones are safe and have access to

Jay Rodaman and his son Matt, both of Rockaway, make themselves at home in a model apartment at Mt. Bethel Village, in Warren. "Matt is extremely independent, self-reliant, motivated, and well-traveled with a great work ethic, and he fits in beautifully at Mt. Bethel Village," where he is enrolled in the day program, Jay Rodaman says.

KATHY JOHNSON/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Mt. Bethel Village in Warren opened in January and offers both residential and day programs. The adults special needs community, which offers 24/7 supervision, can accommodate 41 individuals within 38 one and two-bedroom apartments. KATHY JOHNSON/STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER social interaction; our 24-7 supervision provides that umbrella of safety and our common areas and diverse roster of group activities promote socialization," Garafola said.

What's there

Within its spacious 60,000-square-foot layout, which houses a common room with a large-screen television, a family activities room outfitted with cooking facilities, a gym, a library media room, an art room, a computer room, and a video game room, Mt. Bethel Village can accommodate 41 individuals within 38 one and two-bedroom apartments, two of which are occupied and four others will be shortly.

"There's an intake assessment process, which involves on-site visits, interviews at the family's home and with staffers, and a financial review," Garafola said. Mandatory requirements for residence are that the individual is 21 or older, has exited the school system and desires an apartment where they can close their doors but where support staffers — including teachers, recreation therapists, nurses and a Johnson & Wales-trained chef — are on hand. Staff members help make sure residents get up each morning, take a shower, take any necessary medication, have breakfast and pursue an otherwise normal pattern of life activities, "almost like surrogate parenting," Garafola said.

Residents exhibit different degrees of functionality, anywhere from limited language and reading skills to an extensive vocabulary and the ability to drive and hold part-time jobs at local stores. And though many don't have a complete range of social skills or the ability to understand social cues — requiring staffers to work with them on standard practices like shaking hands, saying hello, and not interrupting — "all of them know what it is to have fun and enjoy time with their friends, and the supervision helps keep them on track," Garafola said.

She expects all of Mt. Bethel's apartments to be occupied within 18 months.

Separate from its residential accommodations, a day program, which runs from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday to Friday, is funded by the state's Division of Developmental Disabilities. It offers group members activities, such as arts and crafts, gym workouts, word and board games and field trips to area malls, parks, museums, and restaurants in the facility's six-passenger van and 14-passenger bus.

"Going places with their friends and getting out into the community are very important to them," Garafola said. "There are a limited number of programs in the state with openings, and the need has grown," she noted of the 18 individuals now participating in the day program and the 20 more under consideration. "We're excited to offer this new opportunity because, in the past, most adults in the program used to just stay home."

A happy place

Prior to arriving at Mt. Bethel in January, Matt Rodaman already had experienced the freedom of independent living — last year he shared an apartment in a group facility in Cedar Knolls until differences with his roommate led him to return home, a way of life which he said "has its ups and downs." Rodaman, who drives and has worked part-time at a local ShopRite for the past 18 years, began attending Mt. Bethel's day program two days a week and has never looked back.

"It's a happy place where we do arts and crafts, yoga, read books, play games, and the food is good," he said. "It's fun and the activities keep us busy morning to afternoon."

His father, Jay, 66, confirmed that "Matt is extremely independent, self-reliant, motivated, and well-traveled with a great work ethic, and he fits in beautifully at Mt. Bethel Village."

"They teach him a lot of skill sets that help him in day-to-day functioning and he really enjoys himself. The main thing is the love that the staff has for their residents and day program members," he said. "It's easy to let Matt go and feel confident that he'll be safe, stimulated, and well taken care of. This is really a step forward for him."

This is the type of response the facility is seeking to engender with the families it works with, according to Gertrude Gassler, one of Mt. Bethel's direct support staffers who helps in the planning and execution of group activities for the largely autistic population.

"We try to schedule a variety of activities and field trips that cater to each participant's likes so that everyone's included," Gassler said.

"The thing I love most is the socialization they receive — they've come to count on each other to be there and look forward to seeing each other. Some were living at home before this program and their caregivers were out working, so there was nothing for them to do and nowhere to go," she said.

"I'm overjoyed when I see them connecting to each other. They've turned this into their community."

For Garafola, who has an autistic nephew and three relatives on her father's side with other developmental disabilities, "the special needs population has always been near and dear to my heart."

This approach also can make economic sense. She said that thanks to state-sponsored, self-directed funding, the cost per person per year at Mt. Bethel for residential room and board, the day program, 24-7 support, housekeeping, transportation, and other elements ranges from $52,000 to $96,000, roughly half of the $120,000 to $170,000 annual cost per person in a group-home setting.

"I remember moving into a garden apartment when I got out of college and wanted to extend that great feeling of independence to adults with developmental disabilities," she said. "We believe that communities like Mt. Bethel Village could be replicated all over the state."

"We've watched the successful growth of our Chelsea Senior Living communities, which have expanded to 16 locations throughout New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania in the past several decades," she added. "While there's nothing on the drawing board currently, we would be interested in building additional Mt. Bethel Village communities. The issue is ensuring that they're affordable for everyone."

In the end, said Jay Rodaman, "people with disabilities aren't different — they have the same goals and desires as everyone else and may get there more slowly, but they get there. We're thrilled to see that Matt feels he has a purpose in life and that he's gaining the skills to live on his own in a safe and nurturing environment."

For Gassler, the visible growth in her group's confidence, self-esteem, social skills, and sense of community is the ultimate reward. "Their diagnosis doesn't matter to me — I work with them wherever they're at and no matter what," she shared. "They're such a sincere group of people and they truly touch my heart. They're really turning into a family."

Resource

Mt. Bethel Village is at 130 Mt. Bethel Road in Warren and can be reached at 908-280-0149 or by visiting www.mtbethelvillage.com.

GE Capital Retail Bank

Great Rates.

18-MONTH IRA CD
1.15%
APY<sup>1</sup>

On balances of $2,000 or more

Real Security.

FDIC
INSURED<sup>2</sup>

Build your savings safely with an IRA CD from GE Capital Retail Bank.

- Great fixed rate for 18 months
- FDIC insured<sup>2</sup>
- Free Identity Theft Protection Services<sup>3</sup>
- Traditional and Roth IRAs, current year contributions and rollovers are accepted<sup>4</sup>

When you save with GE Capital Retail Bank, you'll have peace of mind knowing your money is protected by FDIC insurance.

Open your new IRA today using promotion code MYIRA01.

Visit us at our local branch located at 501 Route 22 West, Bridgewater, NJ Or call us at 1-908-253-2000 for more information.

<sup>1</sup> Annual Percentage Yields (APYs) are effective as of 3/3/13 and subject to change at any time without notice. The minimum balance required to earn the advertised APY is $2,000.00 and must be deposited in a single transaction. Accounts with balances of $2,000 or more earn 1.15% APY. The minimum balance to open an IRA is $2,000.00. A penalty may be imposed for early withdrawals. Fees may reduce earnings. IRAs cannot be applied for online. After maturity, if you choose to roll over your IRA, you will earn the base rate of interest in effect at that time. Visit www.gecbr.com for current rates, terms and account requirements. Rates apply to personal accounts only. Funds must come from a source other than a GE Capital Retail Bank deposit account.

<sup>2</sup> FDIC insurance up to $250,000.00 per depositor, per insured bank, for each ownership category.

<sup>3</sup> Identity Theft Protection Services are provided by Identity Theft 911. ©

<sup>4</sup> IRS may tax withdrawals. Consult your Tax Advisor for more information.

Deposit products and services provided by GE Capital Retail Bank. Member FDIC.

© 2013 GE Capital Retail Bank

AP-5000613635